

CIFAL Plock: Water in urban area

March 22nd – March 24th, 2010

Cities are discovering their water potential which enhances their image. In Central and Eastern Europe but not only the urbanization of waterfronts unfortunately do not comply with natural environment which cause a number of problems.

The conference and 2 days workshop are designed to search for a new approach to water in urban planning, analysis the influence of activation of waterways on towns but also analysis of local and regional conditions in terms of flood risk in urbanized area- legal aspects, planning issues, analysis of the influence of different water elements on the urban area, to encourage development of tools, to promote public-private partnerships as a catalyst for good governance development, to present the examples of good-practice in development of urban parts of river valleys.
